BRIAN A. DAY

2090 Avalon Way

Crozet, VA 22932

brian@dayinternet.com

434 242 5559

Brian Day is a well-recognized leader in environmental social marketing and environmental education. He has 40 years' experience in North America and over 35 countries. Brian has taught for sixteen years for Duke University, eight years for the University of Michigan, and four for American University.

Brian served as Rare's Director of Social Marketing for three years, the only international conservation organization to use social marketing as its primary tool for achieving conservation results. Prior to joining Rare, he served as Executive Director for the North American Association for Environmental Education (NAAEE) from 2005 to 2011. He orchestrated a major turnaround in NAAEE's conferences, EE standards, advocacy programs, and service to members. He was responsible for building the largest funding base in the association's history.

Brian is the founder and Editor-in-Chief of a quarterly international peer-reviewed journal, Applied Environmental Education and Communication, published by Taylor and Francis. He has taught graduate and undergraduate courses for the University of Michigan, and undergraduate courses for American University, Wayne State University, the Washington Center and currently online graduate courses for Duke University.

Brian founded Environmental Communication & Training in 2001, a consulting firm contracting with local and global clients. The mainstay of his work has been social marketing and his clients have included: the United Nation's International Waters Program (Pacific Island habitats and water); NOAA (training for habitat protection); WWF Vietnam (chapter on behavior change for training manual); ARD Inc. (tropical timber trading - Indonesia); American Fisheries Society (training and book chapter on aquatic stewardship); US EPA (behavior change on water quality); International Resources Group (behavior change strategy development in the Dominican Republic); GAIN (national campaigns on micronutrient introduction - Cote D'Ivoire and Ghana); Virginia Conservation Network (Political behavior change); Rare, and, Duke University (graduate courses on environmental communication for behavior change). Other communication clients included: Conservation International (Defying Ocean's End strategy and book chapter contributor); Academy for Educational Development (media training); NAAEE (EE management); Northern Illinois University (marketing strategy); WCS DRC and ROC; and others.

He served as manager and technical director of GreenCOM, USAID's global Environmental Education and Communication project. This was USAID's effort to see if over three decades of work in social marketing in health could be transferred to environmental goals. For seven years, he managed and provided technical direction to a Washington-based team of senior professionals as well as field activities in over 30 countries. As Project Director, he served in the dual roles of advancing the state-of-art of EE&C globally as well as providing direct technical advice to USAID personnel and project staff. Brian also provided strategic planning, project design, logistics, monitoring of field interventions, evaluation, personnel, contractual, and financial management. During this time, the project grew to over $50 million, which supported a home office and a field staff in excess of 50 professionals and administrative employees. His hands-on style of management and technical leadership were proven invaluable in providing USAID and the global community of EE&C practitioners with the lessons learned, guidance, and selected strategies, tools, and methods that have been synthesized and widely disseminated through a wide assortment of critically acclaimed GreenCOM products.

He led various GreenCOM technical missions, including facilitating the Multilateral Working Group on Water of the Middle East Peace Process. He provided personalized media training to the Director General of the Tanzania National Park Authority and the Environment Minister of Indonesia.

Prior to USAID, Brian developed the communication department of the Environmental Defense Fund, and served as media director of the World Wildlife Fund and The Conservation Foundation. Among many accomplishments, he conceived, developed, managed and raised the funds for the $200 million national social advertising and marketing campaign in cooperation with the Ad Council on recycling "If you're not recycling, you're throwing it all away." He served as a delegate to the Second Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, London, in 1990; the Habitat II conference in Turkey; and to the International Whaling Commission in 1989. Brian was a guest of the Peoples Republic of China as part of a Scientific Exchange on Botanical Gardens in 1985. He served as a co-coordinator of an environmental conference for network television writers and producers in 1988.

He directed the consensus National Office Paper Recycling Project, which resulted in 1992, in eight major U.S. corporations, local governments, and environmental NGOs developing a national strategy that led to private sector commitment of several billion dollars to retrofit paper plants.

EDUCATION

North American Association for Environmental Education, Washington, DC 2005 -2011 As the professional organization for the field of Environmental Education, he was responsible for staff and program management, fund raising, advocacy, board relations, and the overall health of the organization. During his time he doubled the staff and budget, built a nationwide advocacy program, diversified the funding sources, transitioned the relationship with state and provincial affiliates, and built a multitude of new partnerships. . He orchestrated a major turnaround in NAAEE's conferences, EE standards, and service to members. He was responsible for building the largest funding base in the association's history.

Instructor, Nicholas School for Environment and Earth Science, Duke University, Durham, NC - 2005 to Present

Developed and taught Environmental Communication for Behavior Change, an online international graduate course for students of the Duke

Environmental Leadership program, as well as mid and late career professionals that need to change behavior.

Editor-in-Chief, Applied Environmental Education and Communication: An International Journal, Taylor and Francis, Philadelphia, PA, 2001-Present. Conceived, developed and launched with Taylor and Francis, a new peer-reviewed journal for the field. This is the only journal in environmental communication. A quarterly journal with many additional features, the journal had its first entire volume in 2002.

Project Director, Environmental Education and Communication (GreenCOM) Project, Academy for Educational Development, Washington, D.C., 9/95-9/02. Provided overall direction, technical leadership, delivered environmental education and communication, technical assistance, capacity building support, applied research, and synthesis and dissemination initiatives to developing country government institutions, NGOs, universities, schools, private sector entities, and international bodies. Areas of specialization included: environmental education, media and communications strategies, environmental organizational development, media and environmental journalism training, media campaigns, government agency strategies, social marketing, media positioning, outreach strategies, and audience targeting. He guided EE&C field projects in over 30 countries in excess of $50 million, including complex, long-term activities in Egypt, El Salvador, Indonesia, Mali, Panama, the Philippines, and Tanzania. He co-hosted two international EE&C conferences for professionals representing all sectors and regions of the globe. He also established a collection of EE&C materials and resources, now searchable online.

Director of Business Development and Trainer, Susan Peterson Productions, Inc., Washington, D.C., 1993-1995. He has served as trainer in media and presentation skills for corporations, trade associations, and government organizations. Training focused on strategy, campaign development, public relations techniques, interviewing, mass media, persuasion, internal communications, teleprompters, and public service. Clients included the World Bank, NASA, environmental trade associations, leading environmental and health scientists, WRI, cattleman, and corporate leaders..

Founder & Board Member, ECOLOGY Communications, Boston, Massachusetts, 1992-1998. Aimed at launching an environmental television network, The Ecology Channel, it developed into a successful environmental television production company. Initiated original business plan and fostered environmental NGO relationships. Brian served as representative at major environmental, cable, and television conferences, recruited partners and investors, and located footage.

Independent Consultant, Washington, D.C., 1992-1995. Provided a wide scope of environmental and communications services for various clients, including: the State of New Jersey; legal consulting firms; and media training for many organizations.

Professorial Lecturer, American University, Department of Government, Washington, D.C., 1992-1995. Brian taught undergraduate level course on environmental policy. Periodically brought in major leaders from government, NGOs, trade associations, and the private sector as guest speakers.

Director, National Office Paper Recycling Project, The U.S. Conference of Mayors, Washington, D.C., 1990-1993. He directed a consensus-building effort to develop the national strategy on office paper recycling that involved twelve major U.S. corporations and four national associations of local governments, trade associations, and environmental NGOs. The adopted strategy resulted in the investment of billions of dollars by the paper industry.

Director of Media Relations, World Wildlife Fund and The Conservation Foundation, Washington, D.C., 1988-1990. Led national and international media and communications work, including: multi-national press conferences; securing ad placements on national and local talk and news shows; drafted editorials and feature articles;; and delivered media training. He managed the production of documentaries. Served as U.S. representative for the "Save Elephants, Don't Buy Ivory" campaign that led to a ban in ivory trade. He served as a delegate to the Second Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, London, in June, 1990. He also served for nine months as Acting Vice President of Communication.

Director of Communications, Environmental Defense Fund, Washington, D.C., 1985-1988. Brian's role was to develop the communications department. Increased newspaper coverage from an average of 15 articles a month to 300 in the first six months of employment. Trained key staff in media skills and placed them on major news and talk show. Also conceived, developed, managed, and raised funds for a national public service advertising campaign in cooperation with the Advertising Council. The $200 million campaign's tag line was, "If you're not recycling, you're throwing it all away."

Executive Director, FEAT Foundation and Flint Environmental Action Team, Flint, Michigan. 1988-1990. Served as director for a pair of non-profit membership organizations that provided environmental leadership and education, beautification services, community-wide recycling services, and produced a local quarterly magazine. Among myriad accomplishments: raised all funds; lobbied the state legislature; directed the horticultural society; developed a master plan for a botanical garden; created a glass recycling plant; and assisted volunteers in a restoration of the city's greenhouse. He also served during this period as a board member and chair of the Michigan Environmental Council and on the board and VP of the Michigan Environmental Education Association.

Instructor, University of Michigan and Wayne State University, Michigan, 1977-1984. Responsibilities included teaching graduate and undergraduate level courses in environmental communication, mass media and the environment, and environmental fund raising.

Executive Director, Rochester Area Activities Program, Michigan, 1977-1980. Directed non-competitive youth program for over 700 children that gained national recognition. Program was a multi-faceted, multi-centered, social service and recreational juvenile delinquency prevention program for children ages five to fifteen. Many of the activities were nonformal environmental education. He also raised all funds, federal, local, individual, foundation, a community contributions. Initiated and directed staff of 35 and supervised service provision.

Transportation Planner and Economist, Southeast Michigan Council of Governments, Michigan, 1974-1976. Developed comprehensive socio-economic impact analysis of capital and service transportation projects, regional employment projects, and econometric models.

Professional Highlights & Key Accomplishments

United States Army, National Ground Intelligence Center (NGIC)

9/2011 – Present

Current Position: Deputy Program Management (Contracting and Intelligence Operations)

- ☑ Leadership: Directly manage and oversee the day-to-day staff of up to 14 personnel, with a contract workforce of 233 people. Regularly represents the organization in the development and planning of intelligence operations with external military commanders and inter-agency partners in order to improve operational efficiencies and outputs with a strategic focus of meeting national security priorities. I continuously take and interpret broad guidelines established by Division Chiefs, Mission Leads, Military Officers, external Military Commanders and other inter-agency partners to develop concepts and implementation plans necessary to manage intelligence operations, drive intelligence collection, and support analytical production.
- ☑ Program Management: Oversee the expenditure of a $34 million per year budget consisting of five unique sets of funds and 25 different Contract Line Item Numbers (CLINs) with a final financial execution plan of 98% of obligated funds. Regularly engage with and solicit and validate customer requirements in order to prepare recommendations for resource requirements, negotiate with managers of various components of the program to obtain needed resources, identify the proper personnel resourced to each task based on metrics, reports and operational priorities. Considered a Subject Matter Expert and resource for other organizational staff members for intelligence operations regarding future plans, processes, acquisition and execution of requirements. Administer contract proposals for review, evaluation and selection on behalf of the NGIC, and modify existing awards based on operational changes to include no cost-extensions (based on current obligated funds), re-budgeting and re-aligning obligated resources (personnel and financial).

- ☑ Strategy & Analysis: Research and analyze intelligence trends in order to determine how best to optimize tactical and operational intelligence collection in order to meet national security strategic goals. Develop compelling materials based on metrics to validate requirements, support planning efforts to capture and implement strategic plans throughout structured analysis and research related to national security objectives. Coordinate a strategic analytical plan of the organization's geographical expansion across numerous locations of military operations, and headquarter commands within the United States, in order to meet Department of Defense strategy to counter global threats.
- ☑ Coordination: Regularly prepares executive level briefings, white papers, in-progress reviews and acquisition plans in order to meet organization strategic goals. Represents our organizational in interagency and military integrated product teams (IPT) and operational planning teams (OPT). Involved in the establishment of support agreements between organizations related to financial awards for intelligence operational support. Maintains relationships with key stakeholders and decision makers, conducting outreach to customers and inter-agency partners in order to manage internal resources based on operational priorities to achieve strategic outputs.
- ☑ Training: Consistently presents intelligence capabilities, plans and execution at interagency working groups, conferences and training programs to educate other military staff officers on how tactical and operational plans meet national security goals.

Key Accomplishments

- ☑ Consistently earned above-average marks on performance evaluations.
- ☑ Provide ad-hoc financial analysis for upper management to drive critical decisions.
- ☑ Adjusted long-range plans, identified financial implications to support planning efforts.
- ☑ Provided ongoing analysis of current strategic initiatives to identify areas of growth based on mission requirements.
- ☑ Delivered management consulting and organizational strategy to drive process improvements in strategic execution, communications, and procedural compliance.

Previous Employment

1. United States Army – Military Intelligence Officer (2008-2011)
 - a. Cadet – Army ROTC (2006-2008)
 - b. Enlisted Military Police (2002-2006)
2. Case Worker – Domestic Violence Shelter (2008)
